B- Read the following text then do the tasks below:

To ancient travellers, arriving at a city was an incredible experience. They would see huge walls rising up. People came and went through gates – in times of war, the gates were closed. The architecture of cities tells us about the climate. Streets were built so they were cooled by winds, or protected people from sun and rain. All cities have a network of streets, so people, goods, water and information can flow easily. Modern cities have wide roads, fast tramways and underground trains. But early cities had narrow streets.
